Is surviving with fake experience that easy?

So I moved to Bengaluru to search for a job and I've seen at least 4 people who are in IT with fake experience. What they do is learn an in demand technology (Salesforce, testing, devops) go to a consultancy and take 3YOE certificate and apply for jobs in startups. To my surprise most of them are earning between 12-

20LPA. Isn't this unfair? How do these guys escape BGV? Will this not create a problem in the future? Skills will help you survive in the market. Nothing else.

I personally know a guy who started with fake experience and is a top performer. I have also seen guys with fake experience getting kicked out of the organization because of the poor performance.

People with age 25+, or those making a shift in IT, generally do this. Honestly, they don't have any other option as they won't be hired due to age gap, or may have to work for less salaries. I've seen people with fake experience doing good as they up-skilled themselves. Have also seen people benched due to poor performance. Most of them get caught, 3 people joined my current company and the CEO got an anonymous email after 2 months telling that those people are fake, they got fired after that, and even if the CEO had not got that email, they were about to get fired anyway because of their shit performance. Check with human resources to make sure your old position is still available. Making mistakes every now and then is okay, as long as you're able to learn from your mistakes and take responsibility for your decisions.

3. Prepare Your Explanation

Your former supervisor may have no idea why you left. And they will certainly ask why you think they should bring you back.

Be as genuine as possible and give plenty of concrete examples to support your case.

Emailing, rather than calling, avoids a knee-jerk response from your ex-manager and gives them a chance to pull their thoughts together before responding.
